BERTIE BIRD

"GOES TO SEA"

"Hey! Guess what!" said Bertie Bird to his brother, Billie, one morning. "I'm going to the seashore!"

"What for?" asked Billie. "Isn't the bird-bath big enough for you to swim in?"

"Don't be silly!" said Bertie. "I'm not going to swim! It's too cold! I just want to see all the wonderful things I've heard about — the ocean, big ships, strange birds, and sandy beaches. Want to come along and see them?"

"Sure!" chirped Billie. "But remember, THIS time, we're just going to LOOK!"

"What did you think we were going to do?" snapped Bertie crossly. "Go for a long ocean voyage?"

"I wouldn't be surprised," twittered Billie. "You've done crazier things than that."

"Not THIS time! Honest!" promised Bertie.

"Come on — let's go!"

"Okay!" answered Billie. And away they flew on their long journey to the sea.

Bertie and Billie were just as good navigators as any army pilot, and they did not need a compass to guide them. They flew in a direct course without once losing their way. After miles and miles of flight, they landed on a rocky cliff overlooking the ocean.

"Cheepereel!" cried Bertie. "What a lot of water!"

"It certainly is!" gasped Billie. "And look at all those big white birds circling over it!"

"They must be sea gulls," Bertie told him.

"Let's go down on the beach and watch them."

Before Billie could answer, Bertie was practically there, so Billie darted after him. But as they landed in the soft sand, they forgot all about the sea gulls, for along came Skippy Sandpiper — and HIS antics were a lot more interesting to watch.

Skippy was running hurriedly this way and that, as though he were chasing something. Then, suddenly, he would stop, poke his long grooved beak into the sand — then off he'd run again.

"Hey!" called Bertie. "What are you doing?"

"Hunting crawfish," answered Skippy.

"Want some?"

"Yes, thank you," said Bertie. "I'm starved!"

"Me, too!" said Billie.

Skippy set to work. And in no time at all, he, Bertie, and Billie were stuffing themselves with crawfish and sand crabs.

"I'm THIRSTY!" Bertie suddenly announced. And off he hopped toward the ocean to get a drink.

Billie started to follow him, when Skippy yelled, "Watch out! Here comes a wave!"

Skippy was not fooling. Up swooshed a big, foam-capped wave right at the startled little blue birds.

"Eeep!" squealed Billie, darting up into the air.

Bertie darted up, too, but not quite high enough. The spray from the breaking wave slapped Bertie with such force it knocked him out and sent him shooting through the air like a little cannon ball. A second later, he landed kersplap! in the ocean.

"Bertie!" screamed Billie, darting to the rescue.

But before Billie could reach him, a sea gull swooped down and snatched Bertie out of the water. Then up over the ocean he flew, with Bertie still dangling from his beak.

"Hey!" called Billie, flying after him. "Bring my brother back here!"

The sea gull paid no attention to Billie. Still carrying Bertie, he sailed out farther over the ocean.

"Stop!" screamed Billie frantically, as he flew in pursuit. But the gull sped on. And soon his powerful wings had carried him out of sight.

"Oh!" wailed Billie. "I'll NEVER find Bertie now!"

But Billie did not give up trying. He flew as fast as his little wings could carry him in the direction the gull had gone, and finally, glancing down, he saw a ship approaching. Flying around the ship, like an escort, were several albatross.

"Maybe the sea gull's with them!" thought Billie hopefully. He nose-dived toward the ship, but, to his disappointment, the sea gull was not there.

"Have you seen a sea gull carrying a bluebird in his beak?" Billie asked Pete Albatross.

"Sure!" answered Pete. "He flew that way!" He nodded his head toward the west.

"Thanks!" said Billie, starting on.

"Wait!" called Pete. "Did you want the gull or the bluebird?"

"The bluebird," Billie told him. "He's my brother! The sea gull birdnaped him!"

"In that case," grinned Pete, "you're in luck! The gull dropped your brother on the deck of the ship."

"He did?" cried Billie with delight. And down to the deck he zoomed.

"Bertie! Bertie!" he called.

Bertie did not answer.

Billie hopped about among the passengers on deck searching and calling. The passengers, amused, laughed and tried to catch him, but Billie darted out of their reach.

Finally, too exhausted to search any longer, Billie settled down on the canvas covering of a lifeboat to rest.

A few minutes later, the big ship nosed into port. The gangplank was lowered, and the excited passengers streamed down it.

Billie darted about overhead, watching to see if any of the passengers carried Bertie off the ship. But Bertie was not to be seen. And as the last passenger stepped off the gangplank, Billie gave up.

Sadly, he turned and started to fly away. "Bertie's gone!" he sobbed. "I'll never see him again!"

"BILLIE! BILLIE!"

Billie whirled around. Then he gave a glad little chirp. For there, prancing gaily down the gangplank, was his little brother, Bertie.

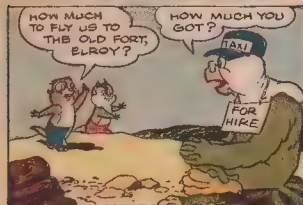

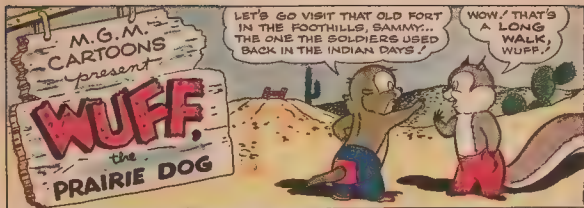

"Oh, Bertie!" cried Billie happily. "I thought you were gone FOREVER!"

"Not ME!" chirped Bertie. "I've just been enjoying a — er — SHORT sea voyage. That is, I enjoyed it AFTER the captain revived me and invited me to be his guest at lunch. What a feed! Much tastier than salty old crawfish or sand crabs!"

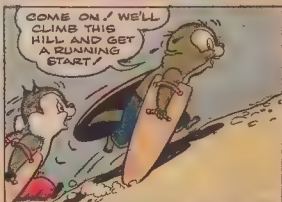

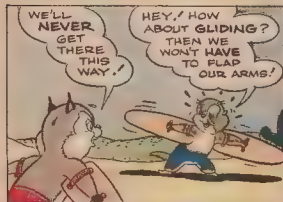

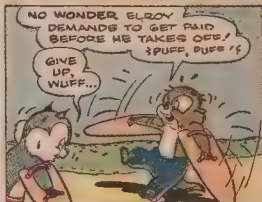

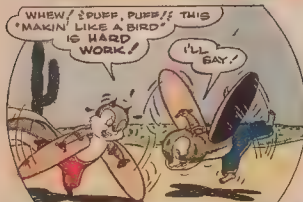

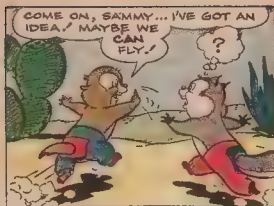

Billie eyed his brother enviously. "It seems to me," he said peevishly, "that I'VE done all the LOOKING on this trip. While YOU'VE had all the FUN!"

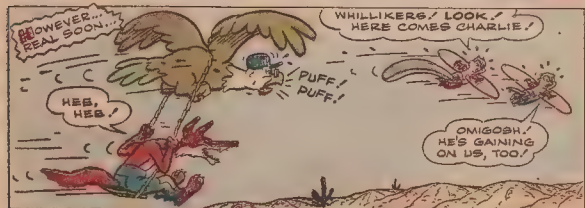

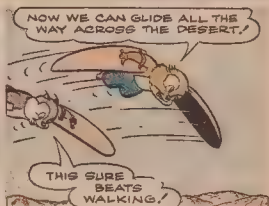

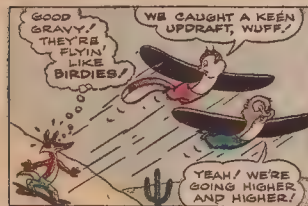

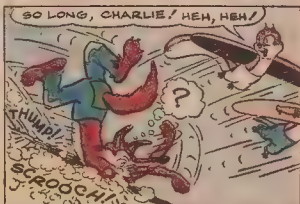

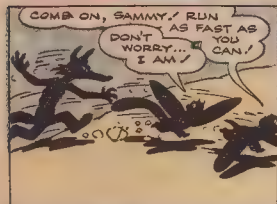

"Well," answered Bertie, as he and Billie started for home, "I didn't PLAN it that way. It sort of happened accidentally!"
